2015 Reflections And Happy New Year...

We all can imagine being in Times Square on New Year's Eve and watching the crystal ball drop 10...9...8...7...6...5...4...3...2...1...
HAPPY NEW YEAR 2016!

It's universal in the human spirit to look forward to the beginning of a new year, with opportunity for a fresh, renewed perspective. In 2015, we've seen many changes and challenges, including a new political season beginning along with an apparent economic recovery.

I began 2015 with a difficult month, as my 95-year-old father passed away after a long and wonderful life. My dad was my best friend, fishing buddy, and of course, my dad. I miss his stories and his affirmation, and how I so wish I had one more day with him. But, as the year has gone by, I've realized how fortunate I am for having had him all of my life, which far outweighs the loss of not having him now. Looking into the future, I see hope, opportunity and joy for my family and my business.

At Wilson & Company, we are fortunate to have excellent colleagues and incredible clients with similar cultures to whom we owe our many successes. We owe to every one of them together who we are as a work family, and as a company.

As you read this, we'll be looking toward Christmas and New Year's celebrations. I sincerely believe 2016 will bring not only new experiences, but also better times. In this season of celebration, when we are with our families and loved ones, please remember to love them, cherish them and be thankful for each other.

From me, my family, and the entire Wilson & Company team: We wish you a very Merry Christmas, happy holidays, and a Happy New Year!
